CLINTON CAMP TURNS UP THE PRESSURE ON FBI CHIEF OVER EMAIL PROBE

Top aides to Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton angrily condemned FBI Director James Comey on Sunday for revealing the bureau's probe of newly found emails related to her use of a private server, and demanded he quickly release details about the discovery. Sources familiar with the matter said on Sunday that Comey likely has limited information about what is in the emails because the FBI lacks legal authority to examine their content thoroughly. Clinton campaign chairman John Podesta and campaign manager Robby Mook blasted Comey for sending a letter notifying Congress of the email review before he even knew whether they were significant or relevant. Comey's letter was "long on innuendo, short on facts," Podesta said CNN's "State of the Union" program, and accused the FBI chief of breaking precedent by disclosing aspects of an investigation so close to the Nov. 8 election. REUTERS

SIX PEOPLE SHOT, AT LEAST TWO KILLED IN SUBURB NEAR WASHINGTON, DC

Six people were shot and at least two of them killed early on Sunday in Prince George's County near Washington D.C., police said. The shooting took place in a parking lot of an apartment complex and in a building, a police spokesman said. At least one of the victims was a teenager, the Prince George's County Police Department said. "We are trying to piece together why six people were shot, two of them fatally," police spokesman Tyler Hunter said in an interview. No one has been taken into custody. One victim was in critical condition and three others were in serious condition, TV station WUSA reported. REUTERS

US AIRLINES LOSE BID TO DISMISS PRICE-FIXING LAWSUIT

A federal judge rejected a bid by the four largest U.S. airlines to dismiss nationwide antitrust litigation by passengers who accused them of conspiring to raise fares by keeping seating capacity artificially low. In a decision late Friday afternoon, U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly said she could "reasonably infer the existence of a conspiracy" among American Airlines Group Inc (AAL), Delta Air Lines Inc (DAL), Southwest Airlines Co (LUV) and United Continental Holdings Inc (UAL) to fix prices. Kollar-Kotelly, who sits in Washington, D.C., did not rule on the merits of the proposed class-action case, which combines 105 lawsuits filed around the country and seeks triple damages. The U.S. Department of Justice last year began its own probe into a possible conspiracy among the airlines, which, according to government data, command a roughly 69-percent domestic market share. REUTERS

WEEK BEGINS WITH GHOSTLY CHILL

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

The temperature roller coaster continues, as does the dilemma of deciding what to wear outdoors.

On Halloween, we expect no scary storms, no monster hurricanes, just a paranormal chill.

It wasn't like this about four years ago on Oct. 29, when Hurricane Sandy made a strike near Brigantine, New Jersey, on a path that has never occurred in weather history.

Sandy was truly the perfect storm as she combined with a non-tropical storm, an Arctic high, to create an enormous wind field of over 700 miles in diameter. Sandy's storm surge generated some of the most catastrophic flooding, destroying homes along the New Jersey coastline, especially along the northeast coast of the state. The southwest shorelines of Long Island, were leveled, and the tough as nails New Yorkers were stunned as New York City's subway tunnels were flooded.

I was on the Howard Stern show that morning, and when I told Howard I believed the subways could flood, he looked at me as I was on some hallucinogenic drug (the answer is no to that). I was just actually scared at what we were forecasting, as it was unprecedented. With Howard being Howard, his main concern was making it to the Jimmy Kimmel Show the next day. I believe he made it.

What many people seem to forget about Sandy is that it sucked in Arctic air on its western side producing blizzard conditions from western North Carolina to West Virginia.

It's been four years since Sandy and the rebuilding continues and unfortunately pockets of families are still suffering with the loss of homes and businesses. The question one must ponder is whether we can have another Hurricane Sandy. The answer, unfortunately, is yes as we will remain in an extreme weather cycle for generations to come.

This week we have no major worries. In fact, much of the Northeast remains in drought conditions. Yes, we can use the rain, but pray to God not another Hurricane Sandy.

Boston Archdiocese contributes $850K to anti-marijuana campaign

Legalization would be bad for youth, needy populations, church says.

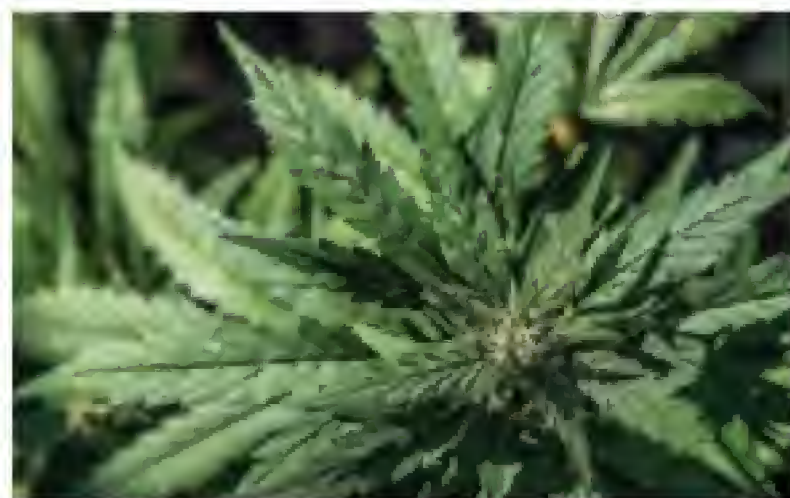

ERIN TIERNAN
@MetroBOS
erin.tiernan@metro.us

In a last-minute effort to thwart a state ballot initiative to legalize marijuana, the Boston Archdiocese has contributed $850,000 to the anti-marijuana campaign.

The Catholic Church's contribution is the second-largest donation received by the Campaign for a Safe and Healthy Massachusetts, and reflects the church's view that a yes on Question 4 would cause increased drug use and strain diocese-run social services.

"The contribution reflects the fact that the Archdiocese holds this matter as among the highest priorities, with recognition that if passed this proposed law would have significant detrimental impact on our parishes and our social outreach and support ministries," Terrance Donilon, archdiocese spokesman, said to Metro Boston.

The money comes from an unrestricted central ministry fund and did not come from parish collections or cash designated for parish support, Donilon added.

So far, the pro-legalization group Yes on 4 has outspent anti-legalization efforts by $1.3 million, an analysis of state campaign finance records showed. But as of Oct. 20, the anti-marijuana Campaign for a Safe and Healthy Massachusetts, still had $1.5 million to spend. The church contribution brings that total to $2.4 million with just over a week left until the election.

On Nov. 8 voters will decide whether to legalize, tax and regulate marijuana in Massachusetts. Pro-legalization voters have a slight lead, according a Suffolk University/Boston Globe poll.

Voters say they are not particularly concerned about potential harmful impact of the drug which shows attempted "scare tactics" by the anti-marijuana lobby aren't working, Will Luzier, campaign director for Yes on 4 said.

"Our opponents have been using the opioid epidemic as a scare tactic to scare people into voting 'no,'" he said. "I think everyone understands the opioid problem was caused by an over-prescription of pain killers and has nothing to do with marijuana."

The state anticipates about $100 million in new revenue if Question 4 passes and Luzier said it would be up to the legislature to decide how to spend that money. It could be used to support prevention programs and efforts to help opioid addicts, he said.

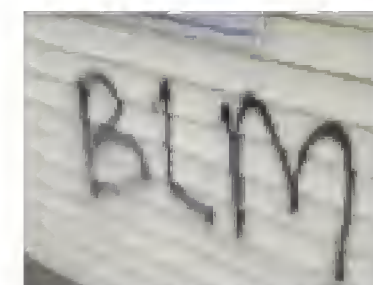

Cop's wife faked home invasion, blamed Black Lives Matter activists

The wife of a Massachusetts police officer faked a robbery, vandalized her own home and blamed Black Lives Matter activists for the alleged crimes, police said.

On Oct. 17, Maria Daly reported that $10,000 worth of jewelry and money had been stolen from the family home, CBS Boston reported. Daly, wife of Millbury Police Officer Daniel Daly, also reported that her house had been tagged with "BLM" in black spray paint, seemingly referencing the Black Lives Matter movement.

"[She] fabricated the entire story," Millbury Police Chief Donald Desorcy said. "There was no break-in in the home. There was no larceny from the home. All property that was alleged to be taken has been recovered."

Maria Daly posted about the "crime" on Facebook after reporting it to police, writing, "We woke up to not only our house being robbed while we were sleeping, but to see this hatred for no reason."

Investigators suspect that Daly's financial problems were her motivation for the hoax, according to the Boston Herald.

The chief added that Officer Daly was not involved in the hoax and has been exonerated.

His wife faces charges of filing a false police report and misleading a police investigation.

Trump mounts bid to turn Clinton controversy to his advantage

The new uproar could not have come at a more opportune time for Trump, who has been reeling for weeks.

Sensing a potential turning point, Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump mounted a furious effort Saturday to portray Democrat Hillary Clinton as unfit to lead the country after the latest chapter in her email controversy unfolded as he tries to mount a comeback.

With the Nov. 8 election only 10 days away, Trump devoted much of his stump speech to try to take the maximum advantage of the FBI's disclosure that it is investigating more emails as part of a probe into Clinton's use of a private email server.

Little is known about the extent and focus of the new FBI review. But

Trump was quick to declare his rival "guilty" at rallies in Phoenix and in Golden, Colorado, declaring that she is symbolic of a type of public corruption that is a "grave threat to our democracy."

Trump charged that the Justice Department, populated by appointees of Democratic President Barack Obama, is trying to help Clinton, given news reports that top department officials did not want FBI Director James Comey to reveal his new review.

"When the outcome is fixed, when the system is rigged, people lose hope. They stop dreaming. They stop trying," Trump said in Phoenix. "Hillary Clinton's corruption is corrosive to the soul of our nation and it must be stopped."

Trump has narrowed the gap in public opinion polls between him and Clinton nationally and in some battleground states where the election is likely to be decided. But most analyses of the polls show him facing a defeat, perhaps a landslide, if the election were to be held today.

That made it essential for Trump to try to change the subject from his own setbacks and focus on those of Clinton, and give establishment Republicans who have been reluctant to support him a reason to get behind him, and perhaps sway some undecided voters as well.

BAD MOON RISING

If ever an election has been haunted, it must be this one. With Halloween at hand, the campaign trail seems to be overflowing with hexes, evil spirits and ghouls. Grab your garlic necklace: Here are my three things to watch in this last full week before the vote.

1. "PAGING CARLOS DANGER" Nothing but shrieks and screams — I suspect that's what was going on behind closed doors at Camp Clinton when word came that the FBI had found more emails to investigate. Sure, it's hilarious that the new info is tied to Anthony Weiner, but I'm

ILLUSTRATION BY

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously." @tomforemancnn pretty sure Clinton loyalists are not laughing. All eyes will be on FBI Director James Comey for any hint about how the investigation is coming along. It's hard to imagine he can get through the whole week without expanding on the scant news so far, but it's also hard to imagine he can fully resist the enormous political pressure from both Dems and Repubs to reveal more about what he knows — or suspects.

2. COUNT TRUMPULA

With his numbers down and Clinton rumbling through the battlegrounds, pundits were nearly ready to drive a wooden stake into Donald Trump's campaign. But hold on — hear that noise in the basement? It's alive! Invigorated by Clinton's latest woes, Trump is sounding like himself once more and haunting the campaign trail. History says this is a really late hour for him to turn the tables yet again, but watch the polls — if he can push up within a point or two of her, the enthusiasm among his followers could make a difference. And trust me, they are still plenty excited about his chances.

3. DEVIL'S NIGHT

For all the October surprises we've had so far I would not bet so much as a Snickers bar that its over yet. Make no mistake: This is one of the hardest hitting and meanest elections we've seen in decades and if either side has a last bucket of dirt, this will be the week they'll let it fly.

Mariah Carey and James Packer's breakup is a glam, messy affair

If Mariah Carey is good at anything, it's drama. She got engaged to Australian billionaire James Packer in January after they dated for a short time. But last week, news broke that the couple was on the outs — and things got messy pretty quickly.

US Weekly reports multiple reasons for the split: her extravagant spending, her close relationship with a male TMZ reports that Mariah has requested a whopping $50 million from Packer for the inconvenience of uprooting her life to Los Angeles and traumatizing her after that thing on the boat.

Kim Tae-ri and Kim Min-hee play scheming women in love in Park Chan-wook's "The Handmaiden," adapted from Welsh author Sarah Waters' novel "Fingersmith." MAGNOLIA PICTURES

A gorehound who makes love stories

"Oldboy" director Park Chan-wook talks about his intense romantic thriller "The Handmaiden."

@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

The latest from director Park Chan-wook, "The Handmaiden," is in some ways a very different beast. Its best scenes don't involve extreme gore and unpleasant deaths, as in "Oldboy," "Sympathy for Mr. Vengeance," "Stoker" and "Thirst." It adapts "Fingersmith," Sarah Waters' novel about two scheming women in Victorian England who fall in love mid-grift. Park relocates to 1930s Korea, during the Japanese colonization, and has turned in the most unabashedly romantic film he's ever made — even if it's still very Park.

Your films always have romantic elements in them, but this is the rare one that's ultimately a very passionate love story.

At Fantastic Fest in Austin, I heard they had these debates followed by a punchout, where people argued for a given topic. The one they did this year was "Is 'Rocky IV' the greatest boxing movie of all time?" Hearing that, I suggested to them this topic: Prove that Park Chan-wook films are all fundamentally love stories. [Laughs] Because I think that's true.

In "The Handmaiden," even though it's a love story, its lovers spend much of the movie apart and suspect the other of betrayal. And your vampire film "Thirst" is kind of an anti-romance. Do you think you can only do love stories if they're fraught with doubt? Of course. That's what makes love great. [Laughs] With my wife, before and even after marriage, I always think there's peril lurking in the corner. If you're not careful and if you don't put effort into your relationship, you have no idea how quickly something might grow into a giant threat. [Beat] I feel like I'm giving a wedding speech. [Laughs]

You worked with a female co-writer on "The Handmaiden," and you've repeatedly worked with another one, Jeong Seo-Gyeong, on other films. Has that been a conscious decision, to make sure the female characters were fleshed out?

I was just in search of a good writer, regardless if they were female or male. After I met [Jeong], I ended up changing the order around and making "Lady Vengeance" before "Thirst." While working with her and putting a strong female protagonist at the center of my film, it made me really enjoy that process and made me more interested in telling stories with strong female characters.

Having a female co-writer on "The Handmaiden" does complicate any charges that come when a male filmmaker makes a film about lesbians, namely that it's inevitable that it will succumb to the male gaze.

That's right. Although what happens when I work with her is, because of the subject matter, I try to be more politically correct. I get crunched up. And she's the one who says, "Come on, director Park, you're trying to mystify women too much. Woman can be like this." [Laughs]

Foals' fourth studio album, "What Went Down," debuted in August from Warner Music. NEIL KRUG

Foals: Hard but not rough

Singer Yannis Philippakis isn't going to keep quiet when you're being a jerk.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Foals' lead singer Yannis Philippakis already has his time off following the conclusion of their world tour planned out.

"I bought quite a lot of books I want to read," he says from a stop in New Orleans. "And I want to write a children's book, and another book as well. I've been making music with Tony Allen — this legendary Afro-beat drummer. And I want to do some gardening. And go to Greece. And work on my jump shot. And then, after all that, I'll start thinking about writing for Foals."

The band's break would come following years of constant touring and heavy promotion, as Foals' released their third ("Holy Fire") and fourth albums a mere two years apart. This time, it's "What Went Down," a more raw version of what we've heard from the alt-British rockers before — both emotionally inward and audibly primal recorded with producer James Ford. Philippakis chats with us about the album's successful American run, why it's so difficult for U.K. bands to break through and pushy male fans in moshpits.

I read somewhere a while back where you said that "What Went Down" could be a chance to make some big waves with American fans. Now that you've been on the road in the states for a few weeks, do you feel like it's done that for you? The shows are a lot bigger, but I don't know if that has to do with building momentum over the last couple of albums. I do know that "Mountain at My Gates" was our first song that did well with radio play over here. When we first came to the States, we'd play for a few hundred people in New York, but then 12 in Detroit. We were doing these double-digit shows. So this tour feels really good. Looking at it, there are a lot of bands from the U.K. that have difficulty coming here.

Why do you think that is? Is it just a matter of taste or is it logistical? Some of it is just how much work you have to put in to come out here [to the U.S.]. It's demanding, and the price you pay is quite high. British bands are used to being able to [tour] the U.K. in a few weeks, and the same with the rest of Europe. Here, it's just so big and you can be away for months at a time.

There's also a cultural difference. Here, it's more showbiz-y as a band. You're expected to be schmoozy in a way. There's a healthy way to do that, but it can be interpreted as a bad attitude from some bands in the U.K. When you bring [us] to the

If you go

House of Blues
15 Lansdowne St.

houseofblues.com/boston

U.S. people, I think it doesn't always work. They think we're rude. If you're coming from the U.K. with a British or a snotty attitude, you've got radio jocks who won't be into that.

A while back during your last tour, you told some fans to knock off their "shady macho behavior," standing up for female fans who were roughed up in the pits. Did you see an improvement in your fans' behavior? That was a reaction to something I had read in the U.K., where girls were complaining about the way male fans were treating them. I think there's a line, because a lot of what makes a rock show is when it's raucous and rowdy and there can be moshing. But then you felt like some people were crossing the line. [With the request] I felt like people are paying to see us, and I hope we have some leverage in our shows.

I don't know if it was an isolated incident, but from what I've read, it's something that needs to be addressed. There are occasions where sisters don't feel comfortable at shows when they see certain douchebags in the crowd, or the actual show gets too aggressive and crosses the line from positive to negative energy or even a predatory one. There should be something said about that.

The Bridge that connects Boston music to the world beyond

From his Cambridge recording studio, BMA-nominated studio producer Arcitype sets the beat.

BRENDAN MCGUIRK
@brendanmcguirk
bmcg@metro.us

Over the summer, the Bridge Sound and Stage — a cutting-edge recording studio located just off Mass. Ave. in North Cambridge — served as a host of the Cambridge Mayor's Summer Youth Employment Program.

When the dozen or so kids arrived at the workplace of Janos Fulop, the Western Massachusetts native better known as hip-hop producer The Arcitype, they found a guy who owns and operates a business, works with interesting and creative people and makes music for a living. Some days in his office, someone realizes their dreams. Some days, it's Fulop himself.

The Bridge is the recording home to much of Boston's emerging and established talent — primarily hip-hop acts, but an increasing number of cross-genre ones too (rockers Tigerman Whoa! completed their full-length project there). Now nominated for a Studio Producer of the Year Boston Music Award, "Arc" made his bones in hip-hop, producing tracks and projects with everyone from REKS, Slaine and Edo G to Termanology and Michael Christmas, developing a reputation for strong musicianship and sample- (and lawsuit-) free beats.

He has also found other enterprising ways to keep his business profitable, generating atmospheric audio for television, films and online ventures. "It's sound creation — making [the] bed music for TV shows we all know," he says. If you've ever watched "Keeping up With the Kardashians" or ESPN's "First Take," you've likely heard the way Arc pays some of his bills.

Offering a "project studio approach in the classic studio scale," the Bridge recognized both the needs of the community and the shifting economy that leads many musicians to blanch at the cost of studio time by opening a second, more affordable room. Arc also runs his own music label, AR Classic Records, which sees him work with talent like Moe Pope, ESH the Monolith, Fran P., and now the veteran Boston rapper Slaine, whose recent "Slaine Is Dead" comeback EP marked his first with the label.

Arc's ambition for the Bridge when he opened it in 2009 was to create an environment that would not only draw young artists seeking to make their name, but one where they could cross paths with their musical heroes.

This year, that vision has begun to crystallize, with the Bridge breaking into what Arc calls "that next echelon." One recent six-week stretch saw the Bridge host studio sessions with Macklemore, Bun B, Atlantic Records, Kanye West's Good Music label and the Dropkick Murphys.

"It was like 'Dude, this is really happening.' And all the while, in between, [we were] literally servicing a kid recording his first song," Arc says. "In my opinion, that's awesome."

Bad Hombres and Nasty Women: The double feature

Harvard Square's Brattle Theatre will host two-nights of films featuring "Bad Hombres" and "Nasty Women." Straddling that fateful day when we all head to the polls to obtain our "I Voted" stickers, are double features of "A Fistful of Dollars" and "Perdita Durango" on Nov. 3 and "No Country for Old Men" and "Multiple Maniacs" on Nov. 9.

Need some decoding?

"A Fistful of Dollars" is a Sergio Leone spaghetti Western and Clint Eastwood's big-screen break. "Perdita Durango," which translates to "Dance With the Devil," features Rosie Perez and Javier Bardem's super questionable haircut. Both will be shown in 35mm.

"No Country for Old Men" is the neo-Western Coen Brothers one starring Josh Brolin and Javier Bardem (again!) that you're probably already aware of. "Multiple Maniacs" is one of John Waters' earliest, cheapest and wildest productions, and is exactly what it sounds like: nasty. However, the screened version is the newly restored version, so let's call it nasty in HD.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

What every female entrepreneur should know

DesignSponge founder Grace Bonney says it's never too late to pursue your dreams.

LAKSHMI GANDHI
@LakshmiGandhi
lakshmi.gandhi@meinc.us

When Grace Bonney began conducting the interviews that would become "In the Company of Women," she knew she didn't want to write a book that spotlighted only the good parts of being an entrepreneur.

"I don't learn something from seeing someone's highlight reel," Bonney, who founded the popular interior-design and DIY site DesignSponge in 2004, tells us. "I chose to interview people who were open to talking about being vulnerable."

That search for openness and honesty also led Bonney to look for women from all walks of life to profile. "The idea of starting a business can seem really scary," she notes. "But there are so many ways to start a business that I wanted any woman anywhere to open this book and see that this can happen for them."

Bonney shares some advice for women who envision working for themselves one day.

Don't listen to anyone who says you're too old

While it can seem like most entrepreneurs today are in their 20s and 30s, the reality is quite different. Artists like Amalia Mesa-Bains had been working for more than 50 years before striking out on her own in her 70s. "There is so much to be said about life experience," says Bonney. "There shouldn't be an arbitrary barrier that you can't do something after 40, especially for women who had children earlier. If you want to start something, it's definitely not too late."

Success can mean many things

"People are beginning to understand that there's a difference between money and success," explains Bonney. "The two things are not the same. Personal fulfillment is equally valuable." It's important for new entrepreneurs not to compare themselves too much with peers and to come up with goals that fit their lives.

There will be ups and downs

Especially in the case of writers and other creatives, becoming a boss and learning how to supervise others has unique challenges. "When you are used to being a solo operation, like a painter or an artist, there is sort of a clunky transition as they become bosses. We've all struggled to find that [authoritative] voice."

Bonney stresses that new small-business owners should give themselves time to learn how to manage a company and be willing to learn on the job.

Accept that balance doesn't exist

After conducting the 100 interviews that make up her book, Bonney says there's one important thing everyone told her. "There's no such thing as work-life balance," she says. "Everyone in the book says they gave up work-life balance. They realized that they couldn't be all things at all times."

Instead of stretching yourself too thin, aspiring entrepreneurs should find a support group of peers they can bounce ideas off and commiserate with. "I don't feel successful every day. There are days that I struggle," Bonney says. "Having people who are going through what you are going through and have the right tools in their tool kits is important."

3 Things we learned as Patriots got their revenge against Bills

ERIC WILBUR
@Metro805
sports@metro.us

The Patriots took home an impressive 41-25 victory in Buffalo Sunday afternoon, getting back at the only team to beat New England this season. Here are three things we couldn't help but notice:

1 It's simple division

As Patriots kicker Stephen Gostkowski's 51-yard attempt to close out the first half warbled in the wind before getting a lucky bounce off an upright, CBS cameras caught a glimpse of Buffalo Bills head coach Rex Ryan, looking shell-shocked as New England built a 24-10 lead, a six-point swing that happened in a matter of seconds. After Buffalo kicker Dan Carpenter missed a 49-yard field goal with 32 seconds remaining, it gave Patriots quarterback Tom Brady and company plenty of time to pull off the inevitable. Instead of a 21-13 deficit, the Bills found themselves down a pair of touchdowns, just like that, watching their possibility — however distant — of considering themselves AFC East contenders vanish in the western New York home of longtime football frustration. At 7-1, the Patriots now have a three-game lead on Buffalo, the same team that gave Bill Belichick's team its lone loss of the season only four weeks ago. For all intents and purposes, the race for the division crown is all but over, particularly with New England heading into its bye week on pace for a 14-2 mark to end the regular season. The Bills, admittedly missing some offensive weapons on Sunday, including LeSean McCoy and Sammy Watkins, might round out to be a wild card contender over the season's final two months. But any designs on the AFC East are a foolhardy venture. Heck, the Patriots could have their division champion T-shirts in the Pro Shop by Thanksgiving.

2 A sort of homecoming

So, which Patriots player had the better return to Buffalo? Was it former Bills wide receiver Chris

Rob Gronkowski set a Patriots record with his 69th touchdown Sunday. GETTY IMAGES

Hogan, who returned to New Era Field in Orchard Park, N.Y. with a day that saw him catch four balls for 91 yards and a touchdown? Or was it local native Rob Gronkowski, the New England tight end who broke a Patriots franchise record with his 69th receiving touchdown? It was yet another huge afternoon for Gronk, who had five catches for 109 yards including a 53-yard touchdown from Brady. Of course, Hogan also had a 53-yard touchdown catch from Brady as well. Gronkowski is back to becoming a regular to this kind of day, especially following his slow start to the regular season.

This was Hogan's second strong day with Brady at the helm, following the day in Cleveland earlier this month when the quarterback made his return to action. Hogan's presence as a deep threat adds another layer to the dynamic Patriots offense.

3 Go ahead, start the MVP talk

Yeah, after two weeks it sounded a little ludicrous to consider Brady among the NFL's candidates for Most Valuable Player, yet here we halfway through the season with him performing as well as the top quarterbacks in the league, this despite his four-game Deflategate suspension. Brady only — only — threw for another 315 yards on Sunday, with four more touchdowns and no interceptions. That gives Brady 12 touchdowns with zero interceptions on the season, a remarkable pace that will definitely have him in a conversation that might otherwise include Ben Roethlisberger, Matt Ryan, and Drew Brees. Brady is having a better season than all of them, despite having to sit out the first-quarter of the year. An MVP Award for 12 games played could be developing into a very real possibility.

Aries Keep your financial and personal affairs a secret. Bring about changes that will make you feel and look your best. A romantic adventure will do you good.

Taurus Get your priorities straight and set your plans in motion. Discuss your options with a personal or business partner, and turn your dream into a reality.

Gemini Question anything that seems suspicious. Someone will try to trick you into doing something you shouldn't and don't want to do. Don't cave under pressure.

Cancer You must embrace change. You'll gain access to information that will alter the course of your life if you participate in something that sparks your imagination.

Leo You will impress some people and make others jealous if you take action and honor your promises. Don't just participate when you can call the shots.

Virgo Put muscle behind your work and speak up about your thoughts. Your insight and dedication will attract interest and the help you need to get things done.

Libra Keep things in perspective. If you overreact, you will draw attention to something you'd rather not address just yet. Put more energy into personal improvements.

Scorpio A change in the way you do things or how you present what you have to offer will make a difference. Strut your stuff.

Sagittarius Be scrupulously honest to avoid looking bad in front of friends and relatives. Your ethics and integrity will help you get ahead.

Capricorn Let your extensive inside knowledge work in your favor. Don't be afraid to do things differently. Keep your competition guessing in order to succeed.

Aquarius Focus inward and refuse to let others' words and actions affect your productivity. A financial opportunity will come from an unexpected source.

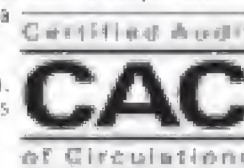

Pisces Go over legal and medical concerns, and make sure everything is in order. Problems while traveling or dealing with authority figures will cause delays. EUGENIA LAST
